

Find Your Tiny Starting Point

A gentle guide to choosing a small handmade piece with meaning.

Maybe you’re looking for something you can touch. Maybe you want a small symbol to keep close. Or maybe you’re still exploring.

There’s no wrong place to begin.

Find Your Tiny Starting Point

Breathing Beads Bracelet
Something small and steady to hold.

This might be for you
Your days are full, you love fiercely, and you'd like a little gentleness for yourself. If you're drawn to jewelry your fingers can follow, begin here.

Why I made it
I made this bracelet with the tender moments of motherhood in mind. We give so much softness to everyone else; I wanted a small reminder that some can belong to us, too.
Not another routine. Just something beautiful to wear, touch, and return to.

A small pause, bead by bead
If it feels okay:
Inhale, counting the 4 pearl beads.
Exhale, counting the 6 silver beads.
Your fingers carry the count, inviting a longer, unhurried exhale.

Keep your breath comfortable. If you feel strained or lightheaded, breathe naturally. Simply touching the beads is enough, too.

Soft Sage · The breath in
A quiet reminder to slow down and return to yourself.

View Soft Sage →

Warm Clay · The breath out
An earthy reminder that you are held, even in the messy middle.

View Warm Clay →

No fixing. No perfect practice. Just a small return.

Find Your Tiny Starting Point

Anchors in Bloom — Floral Pendants
Something meaningful to keep close.

This might be for you
You’re drawn to flowers or jewelry that holds a story without words. Maybe you’re remembering someone, moving through change, or choosing something beautiful for yourself.

Why I made them
I created these pieces to make room for hope without asking anyone to hurry past what hurts—to hold softness and strength together through an unfinished season.
Inspired by daffodils and returning light, Anchors in Bloom carries hope, renewal, and gentle becoming.

A small symbol for your day
The fine silver Daffodil pendant rests near the collarbone—a piece to notice or gently hold.

Let yours represent remembrance, a love that stays, or a part of yourself you’re finding again. Or simply wear it because you love it.

Begin here if you’d like a personal symbol to wear close.

You can be soft and still be strong.

View the Daffodil Pendant

Find Your Tiny Starting Point

Somewhere In Between
You don’t have to know yet.

Still exploring?
Maybe you want something to touch. Maybe a flower catches your eye. You don’t need to name your season before choosing something meaningful.

Why I made room for both
Sometimes we want a rhythm for our hands; sometimes a symbol close to our heart. I created Tiny Anchors to offer places to begin—not tell you what you need.

Follow what draws you in
Breathing Beads — something your fingers can follow
Soft Sage for quiet colour; Warm Clay for earthy warmth.

Anchors in Bloom — a floral symbol to wear close.

Start with a colour or detail you love. Beauty is reason enough; meaning can grow with you.

A little thank-you

Use TINYANCHORSHIP for free shipping on your first order, whenever you’re ready.

Look, linger, and come back when you’re ready.

[View The Whole Collection]